Château la Beaumetane : Built for Success

Born in 1854, just a few kilometers from La Beaumetane, Edmond Théry was a renowned economist. A talented journalist and entrepreneur, Théry contributed to various newspapers, including Le Figaro, where he eventually assumed the role of Director.

In 1892, he established the weekly publication L'Economiste Européen, which he managed until his death in 1925, at which point one of his sons succeeded him.

Having fallen in love with a château in Sologne, he drew inspiration from it to construct La Beaumetane, a distinctive architectural marvel in Provence.

Situated in the midst of the Coteaux d'Aix-en-Provence vineyards and surrounded by vines and olive trees, Château la Beaumetane immediately captures the imagination with its striking red cubic form and its stunning glass conservatory.

Edmond Théry used it as a source of inspiration to build strategies for the success of his new projects.

He went on to write numerous books, traded his wine production extensively, acted as advisor to several government ministries and became Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.
